The roof of Eunos station is based on traditional Minangkabau-style architecture

Eunos station is on the EWL with the station code EW7, situated between Kembangan and Paya Lebar stations.^[30] When it opened, it had the station code of E6.^[31] The station received its current station code in August 2001 as part of a system-wide campaign to cater to the expanding MRT system.^{[32][33]} As part of the EWL, it is operated by SMRT Trains.^[34] The station's name comes its location in the Eunos subzone of Geylang, which is in turn named after Malay community leader Mohamed Eunos bin Abdullah.^[35]

The station runs alongside Sims Avenue and is next to Eunos Crescent and Jalan Eunos as well as above a carpark.^{[36][5]} It has three exits primarily serving the Eunos area and Eunos Bus Interchange. Other landmarks include the Masjid Darul Aman, Eunos Crescent Market and Food Centre, Mangala Vihara Buddhist Temple, and the Kampong Ubi Police Post.^[37]

Like many stations on the initial MRT network, Eunos has an island platform and is elevated.^{[36][38]} The station also has a traditional Malay Minangkabau-style roof,^[36] which was part of SMRT's idea to give the Phase II stations "an ethnic touch". Specifically, designer of the station Scott Danielson of Parsons Brinckerhoff said that "the more [he travelled], the more disturbed [he became by] architects failing to reflect their own culture". The Minangkabau roof was initially meant for Khatib station, and then Sembawang station, before going to Eunos station due to its location in a Malay neighbourhood.^[39]

As a part of SMRT's heritage-themed Comic Connect public art display, there are two murals created by local artist Erica Wee.^[40] The first mural depicts the history of Katong and Joo Chiat, as well as businessman Chew Joo Chiat (the namesake of Joo Chiat), Zubir Said (the composer of Singapore's national anthem "Majulah Singapura"), and Old Palace Theatre. The second mural depicts the history of Eunos, including Mohamed Eunos bin Abdullah, the Telok Kurau English school, and Geylang Serai Village.^[41] According to 8World News, the mural took eight months to complete, including the design concept. Wee, who had returned to Singapore after 15 years of working in Kuala Lumpur, commented that the murals were "the best homecoming gift" as it contains elements when she was growing up.^[42]
